The theory used to analyze these findings is vygostsky's theory of the stages of intrapsychology and interpsychology of children's cognitive development. According to Vygotsky, the relationship between humans (Interspsychology) will affect the formation of children's identity or personality (Intrapsychology). This study uses a qualitative approach to the type of case study research. Informant selection technique with purposive sampling. Total informants were 47 people. Data is collected by interviews, observation and documentation. Data were analyzed by the interactive analysis techniques of Miles and Huberman (interactive analysis models), namely data reduction, data models and conclusions. The results of the study revealed that through the Tahfizh routine (Reciting the Alquran) there was reciprocal interaction between counselors and students (Interpsychology) who instilled religious values, hard work, discipline, honesty, and responsibility. The results of these interactions can be seen from the noble character possessed by students who are hafiz quran (Intrapsychology).

I. INTRODUCTION

The moral and moral condition of the young generation is currently quite alarming. Various immoral acts and violence such as brawls and drugs provide sufficient evidence that a morality crisis is occurring. This is certainly caused by various things, one of which is the lack of parental attention to direct children to positive activities. The trapping of children in free halls and drugs is because there is no control and direction from parents on positive matters so that children are trapped in things that harm themselves.

Having a good character is not an innate, but requires a long process through education and teaching. Characters are formed from the results of internalizing virtue values, therefore a variety of positive activities can be carried out to instill the values of character values one of them in the Qur'anic tahfiz activities. Various methods such as talaqqi, murojaah in the tahfiz quran can trigger interaction and communication between students and tahfiz teachers. Interactions in the activities of the Quran's tahfiz influenced the development of students at the level of interpsychology and intrapsychology (vygotsky). Students must be accustomed to conducive and positive socio-cultural conditions because family and environment play an important role in shaping the character of children and students.

II. REVIEW OF LITERATURE

A. Understanding characters

The Ministry of National Education (2010) provides a definition that character is a person's character, character, character, or personality which is formed from the results of internalizing various virtues that are believed and used as a basis for perspective, thinking, acting, and acting.
B. Character Formation Theory

In essence, character is not innate from birth but is formed in the stage of child development. Characters are not taught, but are instilled through habituation in everyday life. If you want a child with character then in its development stage it must be planted and accustomed to character values, and vice versa.

Social interaction in a cultural context greatly influences the development of children's thinking. According to Vygotsky (Danoebroto: 2015) each function in the development of a child's culture will appear twice namely at the social level in human relations or interpsychology, then appear at the personal level in the child or intrapsychology. So what is obtained and learned by children in human relations (Interpsychology) will have an impact on children's personal development (Intrapsychology). The socio-cultural context in which students play a role and interact with each other in various experiences and knowledge influences the development of intrapersonal / interpsychology of students. The connection in this study is how and how far the relationship between students and educators, the relationship of students with school habits / culture can influence the planting and formation of character values of these students. So the socio-cultural life in the school environment greatly influences the formation of students' character. Schools as a learning environment for students must be able to create conducive environmental conditions and social cultural interactions and support students' positive character development. The activities and programs raised by the school must be able to build good character for students.
